Local Chinese Can't Celebrate Holiday

Although Jan. 25 will be the New Year's day usually celebrated by the Chinese people, Lee Wing states that the local Chinese will not try to observe it formally, as they have been unable to get any fireworks, paper figures and other materials for celebration from China because of the war. Not even the special tea that they have for years imported for their own use is available now.

Under the Republic the name, "New Year" was officially changed to "Spring Festival," but the people have kept to the traditional name
